This is the back door to my heart, oh but don't you tell a soul
That I've given you the key to these rooms inside of me Don't you let nobody know

This is the color of my pain, dusty blue and midnight rain
I might be asking for too much, I was hoping from your touch
You could make these colors fade

You know the end of the world might be just around the corner, might be knocking at my door
This could all be gone by morning, you could always step inside me, put a candle to the dark
This is the back door to my heart

See these lines on my face, too long standing in the wind
A testament to my mistakes, the choices that I made I won't tell you where I've been

You know the end of the world might be just around the
corner, might be knocking at my door
This could all be gone by morning, you could always
step inside me, put a candle to the dark
This is the back door to my heart
This is the back door to my heart
This is the back door to my heart
This is the back door to my heart
