IAM LICET VENIAS, MARITE

iam licet venias, marite:/ You may come now, bridgedoom uxor in thalamo tibi est, /your wife is in the marriage chamber ore floridulo nitens,/and her countenance is flowery and radiant alba parthenice velut / like the white pearl or luteumve papauer. / the saffron poppy at, marite, ita me iuvent / But thus, bridgedoom caelites, nihilo minus / you are no less handsome pulcer es, neque te Venus / and Venus doesn't neglect you neglegit. sed abit dies: / but the day is ending perge, ne remorare. / keep on, don't waste time non diu remoratus es: / You haven't waited long iam venis. bona te Venus / now you're coming. May good Venus iuverit, quoniam palam / help you, because what you desire quod cupis cupis, et bonum / you desire it plainly non abscondis amorem. / and you don't conceal your good love ille pulveris Africi / May he counts the sands in Africa siderumque micantium / and the number of blinking stars subducat numerum prius, / before he wants to count qui vestri numerare volt / your many thousands multa milia ludi./of love-games claudite ostia, virgines: / Quit playing with maidens lusimus satis. at boni / when games are enough coniuges, bene vivite et / then live in a good marriage munere assiduo valentem / and assiduously try to exercete iuventam. / produce children ille pulveris Africi siderumque micantium subducat numerum prius, qui vestri numerare volt multa milia ludi.

exercete iuventam.
