Cover by Jonathan Randol

I lift you up to let you down there ain't no cover when you come around and i have found the only way to understand it ain't by chance it ain't by right i run for cover in the morning light i pick my fights and so i sit to make my stand it may be you, it may be me but i will cover these eyes to see and maybe we should stop and linger while we can i have fanned the fire so long and i'll take cover when i know its gone i maybe wrong or maybe i misunderstand though it will never be enough i will cover you with my love come push or shove you know that i'll be by your side you hide your face i hide my hands i run for cover while you make your plans another chance to see what goes after the pride i have felt that look before you blow my cover cause your keeping score and before we turn our eyes back towards the sun

i have spun this crown of web i use to cover my crowded head when i said that you should walk away well i knew you should run
