Galileo fell in love
As a Galilean boy
And he wondered what in heaven who invented such a joy
But the question got the better of his scientific mind
And to his blind and dying day
He looked up high and often sighed
And sometimes cried

Who puts the rainbow in the sky?
Who lights the stars at night?
Who dreamt up someone so divine?
Someone like you and made them mine?

Love can make you ask some funny questions now and then But just remember the alternatives

For I remember when I was lonely And unhappy and my lips were cold as ice
But you kissed me and good heavens now I'm here in paradise

So if ever I am not kissing you or looking in your eyes
I won't be blind and I won't cry I'll look up and gladly sigh, and thank the guy

Who puts the rainbow in the sky
Who lights the stars at night
Who dreamt up someone so divine
Someone like you and made them mine
Someone like you and made them mine
