Love comes and goes, out the window Lovers ask too much You're always not something you're not Or you're just too, too honest, too mad, too blue

But your friends think you're just right the way you are They don't hold it against you if you've got a stormy
heart
And if you find that you've lost all hope in men
You can still have faith in your friends

The last one really let you down
He stuck you in that place alone
He was weak when he needed to be strong
He never visited and he never even called
And he knew how hard it was for you

You promised yourself that you wouldn't fall for the wrong guy
And now you need someone to pull the needles from your eye
Every time I say "I can't go through this again" I go back to my faith in my friends

There for you, in the middle of the night
With blurry eyes, you're grief-stricken
And you can curse and cry
With no consequences or conditions

Your friends think you're just right the way you are They don't hold it against you if you've got a stormy
heart
And if you find that you've lost all hope in men
You can still have faith in your friends

You promised yourself that you wouldn't fall for the
wrong guy
And now you need someone to pull the needles from
your eye
Every time I say "I can't go through this

I thank God for my faith in my friends
