Across the river we all had dreams
They got caught up in little puddle upstreams
Melting down to the very cold
Just thank God there's always a little more

We moved to cities to separate
We end up smashed together anyways
And every color and every shape
We're all mixed up just like Lauren

Hate

And you can say that things that change
But in the mirror I 'ways look the same
In between high and low
Takes the few things that we know
Just to balance where to go

We stand on platforms and wait for trains
Some double doger will have worldly pains
We are never sure which one of us is moving now ahead

You can say that things that change
But in the mirror I always look the same
In between the high and low
Takes the few things that we know
Just to balance where to go

My eyes close with my place wide open
My breath it stops on a dime

I call my mother though we don't go along
Because when I was there she was cold and furious
One last thing I need to get a handle of People can love you, still do you wrong

You can say that things that change
But in the mirror I always look the same
In between the high and low
Takes the few things that we know
Just to balance where to go

Baby, just to balance
