"Human Stain"

[I see the cemetery sky carmine red and deep watch the oceans rising high its the human stain]

talk about the growing hunger ask why with deep concern don't you think the human is ceaselessly vain but it hurts to be alive my friend in this silent tide we're driftwood passing by don't you wish you were a child again just for a minute

just for a minute more hear the ticking of a clock the sound of life itself no one really wants to die to save the world

tell me that you're torn asunder from how we fail to learn and tell me

as the earth goes under where's your anger now so it hurts to be alive my friend in this masquerade were all one day must die don't you wish you were unborn again

just for a minute
just a minute more

tic toc the ticking that could tear asunder the beating from a heart of stone the loss of your divine prosperity cause it costs to be alive my friend and this life that someone merely gave to you that's the price you pay minute by minute

you beg for a minute more
