I was far too lost to discover
Six of one but none of the other
I slid myself toward the fire
But I'd never burn
I could see what happened before
I could see them closing the door
For years I let all the water
Fill up my lungs

I could hear the sound of your blood
Cascading down toward my flood
I slid myself into what would
Be my revenge
Underneath the memories of anger
Lay your cloak and dagger
You had a way of crashing
Right in to me

What happened was all your fault
Why would you deny it?

Opaline

In the depths a figure was hiding
All dressed in black and deciding
If she would come to devour
Our falsified life
You never wanted to be
What you claimed to foresee
For yourself so I sat waiting

What happened was all your fault
Why would you deny it?

Opaline

You could have tried a little harder
To fix this
But somehow you made me believe
That this was all we could be
