wasn't certain of anything then

I didn't know who I was just yet

Still a tiny light shone inside

It would lead me to what I had to find

I had to learn to be alone

I'd been told that so many times

I had to learn that lesson myself

I couldn't turn to anyone else

I was searching for what I'd done wrong

But the answer was hidden inside me all along

I was fighting the urge to run

But there was nowhere to hide from the rising sun

I think with us the timing was off

I wasn't ready to give of myself

And you couldn't be consistent at all

We were two people with good intent

But our execution was painfully bad

We tried to make it all OK

We tried to make it all go away

I was searching for what I'd done wrong

But the answer was hidden inside me all along

I was fighting the urge to run

But there was nowhere to hide from the rising sun

Can passion survive a balancing act?

Can two people truly forget the past?

And will I do a better job this time?

Will I know?

Have I grown?

Am I home?

I was searching for what I'd done wrong

But the answer was hidden inside me all along

I was fighting the urge to run

But there was nowhere to hide from the rising sun
