I feel a shadow passing over me that could stay forever more like a wave I'm breaking far in sea there's no one to hear the roar and the days are drifting into seasons they're the hardest I have ever known a million spaces in the earth to fill but there's no going home

no going home

and I can dream before the break of day that I'm back with you again then the morning blows it all away and leaves an echo of your name and still a thousand miles lies between us and we're waking up alone what if I could cross a hundred borders

there's no going home

when the thunder breaks the empty sky I shall be there no one to hold you when the storm birds fly is there no one left to care and searching rumors with my hollow plans when all I wanted is what's mine I'm lost and lonely in this foreign land I'm left too far behind the lines

I want to tear down these walls between us and I can't make it alone a million spaces in the earth to fill and here's a generation waiting still

We've got year after year to kill but there's no going home

no going home

no going home
no going home
no going home
no going home
no going home
no going home
no going home
