I watched TV til the sun rose Fell asleep in the same clothes Woke up alone, picked up the phone
And called the one I said I'd never call again

I need to lose a number Someone take my phone away

It starts with a little tiny trigger, that sparks an even bigger Memory that rushes over my body, blood begins to simmer
My heart beats a little faster, cuz I've been hurt
And now the feelings coming back, and I'm looking around
Nobody notices now, don't let this happen again How can I be so weak and, hold the phone like I've done before
And know everything I'm doing is wrong

It gets so bad sometimes, especially after late nights
A little drink, feels like I'm doing alright
Then it hits me, grips me quickly Takes me to that dark place I know, but now I gotta know
Just a little more, thinking answers will alleviate the paranoia
I hold the phone like I've done before Still everything I'm doing is wrong

Won't you please pick up the phone We haven't spoken in so long
I can't help myself, I just need to know How this ended so wrong
