I was consumed with proving you were a liar.
But what good would that do?
We both know the truth;
We were there and we lived it.

But then we kept rewriting and revising it.
Rehashing and repeating
It was bad for us both.
And I was passive aggressive I'm sorry,
I was anxious to let it all go.

You're no one else's problem but you sure are mine
You're no one else's problem but you sure are mine

So many words and they all burn like blood on my tongue
So many songs and I hate singing every one.
I worry that I may never be satisfied.
I try and try and try,
But it's there in the front of my mind:
Bodies rotting in water into mixtures of color that blur
all the time.

You're no one else's problem but you sure are mine
You're no one else's problem but you sure are mine
You're no one else's problem but you sure are

Yeah, you sure are mine.
