Mum would shout and scream when dad would come home drunk
When she asked him where he'd been, he'd say "up the clissold arms"
Chatting up some huzzy, but he didn't mean no harm
Sunday morning drives, just to get away Ramsgate or southend, it would always be a laugh Paddling by the sea, trousers rolled up to the knees Walking by the sea, full of dreams, eating ice cream Grandma's burnt her cheeks getting brown, turn her over

Fortis green, memories of days when I was young
It can only be a memory. a time that now has gone

There's uncle frank tellin' stories from the war Frightening all the kids, yet we'd heard it all before While the bombs were droppin' round, there were parties underground
Aunt lil's at the gin, while mum's singing songs
From the 40's when variety, max miller was going strong
All the characters are gone, oh, what a blooming shame
I wish that it could be like it was in the old days
Sat on auntie's knee, toasting bread in the fire-place

Fortis green, memories of days when I was young

It can only be a memory. a time that now has gone
Memories of fortis green, when I was just a lad Collecting bottle tops, threepenny bits. fishing with my dad

Sister's in the doorway, snogging with her bloke
Scared to put the cat out 'case I put him off his stroke
But she wouldn't be denied, I got a shilling as a bribe
I used to do my courting on an old kitchen chair
The girls were all so sporting, but I only really cared for my little katie-sue
There was nothing she wouldn't do Sunday after tea we would listen to the wireless

Hancock's half-hour, luxembourg. we'd sit for hours

Fortis green, memories of days when I was young
It can only be a memory. a time that now has gone
Collecting bottle tops, threepenny bits. fishing with my

That's it
