It feels like your life's crashing down all around you
Let me ask if it's really so bad
Look at the world in it's suffering
Can you honestly tell me that no one else could understand
All of the hurting inside?

Why can't you see
Freedom is sometimes just simply another perspective
away?
Who could you be
If your lens was changed for a moment?
Would you still be the same?

A young child looks through a great stained glass window
Watching the people go by
Everyone seems to be wearing a red coat
His mother sees jackets in white
Now he can't understand
Why does she see it this way?

Why can't you see
Freedom is sometimes just simply another perspective
away?
Who could you be
If your lens was changed for a moment?
Would you still be the same?

Yesterday, you really couldn't see
By changing your angle a new world would be Revealed to your once blinded eyes
By moving a few degrees

Why can't you see
Freedom is sometimes just simply another perspective
away?
Who could you be
If your lens was changed for a moment?
Would you still be the same?

Why can't you see

Freedom is sometimes just simply another perspective
away?
Who could you be
If your lens was changed for a moment?
Would you still be the same?
