It's cold outside but you might not need that jumper that you wear Startled by the starlight you might not notice til you're there
When the room is filled it heats up like a mass of compressed air
Our sweaty bodies touching but my voice just isn't
there

It's so hard to tell you
It's so hard to tell you how I feel

It's late outside and I'm trying to flag down cabs as they pass me by I need your hand right here girl they'd stop for you anytime
Despite the words of warning I stick to you I won't deny To let this go seems wasteful I keep on saying one more try

It's so hard to tell you
It's so hard to tell you how I feel

Words have a way of constantly escaping me
Each breathe that I take is another word I don't speak

So hard to tell you how I feel

It's so hard to tell you
It's so hard to tell you how I feel

Words have a way of constantly escaping me
Each breathe that I take is another word I don't speak
