The Levellers/Trad. arr. by the Levellers/H. Mackay)

Julie was a lonely girl

She said she was born that way

She always was that way

She leeft home at age sixteen

Got a job that's what you're supposed to do

What else is there to do

She fell in love and settled down

In a counc place on the edge of town

CHORUS

She'd feel alone in a crowded room

Cry when she heard a happy tune

It would be nice to holiday

Till they took her job away

Just took her life away

And doing nothing isn't fun

When you've nothing from which to run

Nowhere left to run

She'd visit the social every day

Every time be turned away

A hundred stairs to her new room
Over glass and blackened spoons
Children grow old so soon
Past the kids who gather there
Pain masked by narcotic stares
But no one really cares
Her dreams were cut up and bled dry
A million voices in her cry

Julie waits, her world is her window
And Julie hates just what she doesn't know
And Julie hates the world below
But Julie loves
She loves too much to know
