B. Payne, P. Barrere, and S. Murphy
I close my eyes and try to remember Lookin back on it now it seems so much like a dream all the places I ever wandered, all the kisses I ever stole yours are the ones I still remember, they never grow cold they're just under the radar my heart is a mountain, I'd walk on fire to get back to you reaching out for your touch, I'm clinging to your sould thought I'm not far from sight No I'm not far from sight now I'm just under the radar under the radar
it's a place where all is forgiven
where love never grows old it's lying just below the timber line
under the radar
where the spirit goes on and on the time has come and gone, all my options blown to dust
when a gentle tap upon my shoulder left me reelin from my past
I was standing on a stretch of highway, going back to see a friend thought I'd reached the point of no return, but came back under the radar I've been there ever since
under the radar
you can trace your thoughts of darkness with the movements of the sun when you see what stands before you and allow yourself a dream though it's not far from sight now no it's not far from sight it's just under the radar

under the radar
where all is forgiven
lying just below the timber line
where the spirit carries on
where the spirit goes on and on and on and on and on
