those landscapes you see are not made of life at all they are made of death they're like a cancer that's covering the earth and everything you see is just grey walls and wasteland around I lost my voice I lost my thoughts and pain is tearing me apart heart on ice, this heart's on ice is weak and frail, so weak and frail.

red light blue light flashing fear there's too much stone around here another door slammed on my face and you don't bother to here it is dark no noise around me when I was in that state red blood eyes flame in the sky and walls are breathing by hate nothing new in the dying sun and on the western front a perfect reflection a senseless action suburban homes you know

I lost my head I lost my faith and pain is tearing me apart and everything I see is just grey walls and wasteland around
