Gonna take more eyes than the eyes that you have in your head
To see what's happening gonna take more teeth
Than those in your mouth to chew it all down Gonna take more brains than the brains that you have in your skull
To find the answers, because these days information stinks
There are enough lies here to fool the Sphinx

The newest version of the oldest trick
It's been working since they wrote that book
And you say that it makes you sick
But not before that it made you look

Gonna take more words than the words that can roll off your tongue
To express that there is a way better than this to be free
Gonna take more hands than the hands that grown on your arms
To chip away the tired veneer
It's thick as a myth
You don't know what you're messing with

The newest version of the oldest trick
It's been working since they wrote that book
And you say that it makes you sick
But not before that it made you look

Oh well, it started so long ago with Just a few rich men they Wanted to protect what they had but the Problem with freedom is Everyone wants some and If all are equal then the poor might get mad
So they found enemies, built up mythologies
To keep the people from snooping around
It worked so well we can no longer tell
Where the truth turns to dust who to kill who to trust

The newest version of the oldest trick
It's been working since they wrote that book
And you say that it makes you sick
But not before that it made you look
