Chasing the sunset, while my hand rotates to the left carving canyons into my wrist

Sometimes the screaming silence creates the backdrop for the next blood stained, painful kiss Four-thirty after midnight. The hours passed by in silence

these moments I ache for to pass, creeping in black air upon the white walls as purple sheets encase our restless forms.

Dark red rivers run deep, flooding mountain walls with this blood

Black clouds come up slowly as they cover me in whispers
