The year: 1967. September 25. Lot 34 in Beverly Hills, California.
Hollywood! And the cast of characters... Adam West was there, with his prickly fat ass wedged into grey tights, with his bouncy paunch hung over his yellowplastic yellow utility belt. And Burt Ward, who had to have his genitalia taped down with duct tape to hide his frequent erections. It was widely known in Hollywood that the dynamic duo were the two biggest cokeheads in town. In fact, during the entire third season of filming, the two were always high as a kite. They were to have a great many hallucinations. On this date, they decided to have a little party on the set. They were going to ingest a little LSD, and I ain't talking about the least significant digit, either. Let me tell you who was there. DeForrest Kelly and John Davidson stopped by. Oh, Fess Parker was there. Dennis Weaver. Marlo Thomas. Robert Clary a.k.a. Colonel Louis LeBeau. And Otto Preminger, who had played Mr. Freeze on that night's episode of Batman. Well they were all trippin and tootin in that mobile home that they affectionately called the Bat-Hole, when, who should wander in but little Jimmy McCullough, the young son of one of the stagehands. I believe he was the gaffer. Adam West shrieked A young pig! Ready to be roasted! John Davidson stuffed an apple in his mouth and Marlo stuffed him in the oven. In their acid state, they cooked him and they ate him.

Well, the reason you've not heard about this story is simple. Bill the show's sleazeball producer, had extensive connections with the mob.

Dozier,

He had the entire McCullough family rubbed out, all the way from dad to dear old grandma in the nursing home. Dead men don't talk, you know
