She don't dream the way she used to dream
Before her body condemned itself to feel like an empty
building
One day she'll discover that the habits that she covered
Only smother the hopes that her heart will change

She broke her teeth on an unsheathed piece of hard tasty candy
She closes her eyes at night
She can hear the calvary go by
She can taste his tongue on her mouth
And it's tasting like disease

She don't ever see what should be seen
'Till the thing that should be seen is out sight
She don't ever see what should be seen
'Till the thing that should be seen is out sight
She don't ever see what should be seen
'Till the thing that should be seen is out sight
She don't ever see what should be seen
'Till the thing that should be seen is gone

Her fingers burn when she folds them to pray
That hunt for love ain't cut like the holes in her duvet
She aint too certain that her psyche can take Another season of hunters pretending to spare their prey

And her brains froze black
And her eyes rolled back
And her steps shellacked
She don't know what she's becoming

And her brains froze black
And her tongue rolled back
And her heart shellacked
She don't know what she's becoming
She don't know what she's becoming

She don't dream the way she used to dream
Before her body condemned itself to feel like an empty

One day she'll discover that the habits that she covered
Only smother the hopes that her heart will change

She broke her teeth on an unsheathed piece of hard
tasty candy

She closes her eyes at night
She can hear the years she lost go by
She can taste his tongue in her mouth
And it's tasting like deceit

And her brains froze black
And her eyes rolled back
And her sense shellacked
She don't know what she's becoming

And her brains froze black
And her tongue's rolled back
And her heart shellacked
She don't know what she's becoming
She don't know what she's becoming
She don't know what she's becoming
