I was a stoned drunk silhouette of my past
I lost my nerves when he took me on
He was this high-heeled smooth talking middle class bastard
Who tried to stab me for where I was from

And though his words was covered in yesterdays mud
The boys around him laugh his way
But on the parking lot where I was born
He didn't come to play, no he didn't dare to stay

You think you're better than us
You think you're better than who
You think you're better than Annie's angle
You think you're down with the people who laugh when
you frown
And they move from ground to ground

You think you're better than us
You think you're better than who
You think you're talking to Annie's angle
You think you're down with the people who laugh when
you frown
And they move from ground to ground

Such a pit no one's hurt from your punch
Must be a drag to look so debased
On the other side you've still got your kids to die for So why take it all out on me

That angry look doesn't suite your face
You've got your medals in a box
And on the telly there's this leader saying Blame it on the boss, you've got to blame it on the boss

You think you're better than us
You think you're better than who
You think you're better than Annie's angle
You think you're down with the people who laugh when
you frown
And they move from ground to ground

You think you're better than us
You think you're better than who
You think you're talking to Annie's angle
You think you're down with the people who laugh when
you frown
And they move from ground to ground

You think you're better than us
You think you're better than who
You think you're better than Annie's angle
You think you're down with the people who laugh when
you frown
And they move from ground to ground

You think you're better than us
You think you're better than who
You think you're talking to Annie's angle
You think you're down with the people who laugh when
you frown
And they move from ground to ground

You think you're better than us
You think you're better than who
You think you're talking to Annie's angle
You think you're down with the people who laugh when
you frown
And they move from ground to ground
