These are only thoughts that I can take from you and these are only dreams that I have hid from you and what you thought you saw could have been much more but it turns to dust like a plank to the saw

And we watch it fall to rags from riches through miles of clouds to the bottom of the sea and we bury the past not to go against these wishes and we watch it fall just because

Fortunes have escaped and returned to you flailing in the wake of everything that's left to lose and so it goes once more to another closing door

And we watch it fall to rags from riches through miles
of clouds to the bottom of the sea and we bury the past in roadside ditches and we watch it fall just because

What's a little wisdom lost nothing comes if there's no cost what's been gained from every single coin you've tossed

of clouds to the bottom of the sea and we bury the past in graveyard ditches and we watch it fall once and for all
