Wenty thousand miles from the place I call home
And twenty some odd years since the day I was born
And I'm searching, I'm still searching for answers
People have often told me to chose a different road
That this one can get ugly, twisting turns that just grow old
But I'm walking, I don't care if I'm walking alone
And I'm, screaming into the dark
Searching for an answer, where do I go from here?
I, I don't know where I'm headed
Or if this is just a big mistake
Something's telling me that falling down
Is a chance that I'll just have to take
I get on the bus and put down my bags
And take a final glance at the only home I've known
At the only home I've ever known
And I'm screaming into the dark
Searching for an answer, where do I go from here?
All of my life, I've been so comfortable
But I always knew, that there'd come a day
When I'd have to get out, get out

I'm screaming into the dark, searching for an answer

Where do I go from here?

And I'm standing still but I can't catch my breath

Already running as fast as I can but going nowhere

Where do I go from here?
