Looking back, he sees it all.

It was her first date the night he came to call

And her dad said "Son, have her home on time, and promise me you'll never leave her side."

He took her to a show in town,

And he was ten feet off the ground.

(Chorus)

He was walking her home, holding her hand

Oh the way she smiled, it stole the breath right out of him

Down that old road, with the stars up above

He remembers where he was the night he fell in love

He was walking her home.

Ten more years, in a waiting room.

And half-past one, was when the doctor said

"Come in and meet your son."

And his knees went weak, when he saw his wife

She was smiling as she said "He's got your eyes."

And as she slept he held her tight

His mind went back to that first night.

(Chorus)

And wandered through the best days of her life

Sixty year together and he never left her side.

A nursing home, at eighty-five

And the doctor said it could be her last night.

And the nurse said "Oh, should we tell him now? Or should he wait until the morning to find out...?"

But when they checked her room that night,

He was laying by her side.

He was walking her home, holding her hand,

Oh, the way she smiled when he said "This is not the end."

Just for a while, they were eighteen

And she was still more beautiful to him than anything.

He was walking her home. (x2)

Looking back, he sees it all.

It was her first date the night he came to call.
