Walking out across the street,
shaking ground beneath his feet.
Can he now make right all that went wrong?

People pass him one by one,
he doesn't notice anyone,
walking in a tunnel of his own.

Feelings that he can't define,
sends him shivers down his spine.
Pearls of cold sweat bursts around his neck.

Heading for the station as his,
patience turns to aggravation
Staring blindly forward, stumbling on.

Watch his honour slip right through his hands.

Walls built all around, she tore them down.
Was kept confined, now left him behind.

Heading cross the street, he strides,
the other side, the darker side.
Casting shadows around him all the while.

Desperation crawling up his back,
breathing fast he's losing track
of all that was his dignity.

Watch his honour slip right through his hands.

Walls built all around, she tore them down.
Was kept confined, now left him behind.
Why she stayed around, while he wore her down?
Years went on, 'til she would go, went, gone.

Running through the station door,
down the stairs towards the bottom floor
If she's not there she's lost forever more.

Further down the platform on the other side,

he sees her from behind.
He catches up but don't attack.

Waits for her to turn around, look back.

Walls built all around, she tore them down.
Was kept confined, now left him behind.
Why she stayed around, while he wore her down?
Years went on, 'til she would go, went, gone.
'Til she would go, went, gone.
