

Matt Caplan

"Sideways"

Visit "Sideways" on MotoLyrics.com

Lost my train of thought around Chicago,
Found a little solace where you lay.
Never made collages as a young child.
Not that much to see, so much to say.

Now even in this silence there's a thunder,
And rain that steals the breath beneath this cage.
And at least I've got your memory to soothe me:
This bitter poison ripening with age.

Because everything I've ever done, I've done because I love you.
Silly you should ask
I'm afraid that I'll spend the better part of next year
scared that I might need you
Bring me down and I'll feel again.
Everything I've ever done, I've done because I love you
sideways
Sideways

Lost my patience well before West Fourth Street.
Found a copper coin said "sieve the day".
And I let the angry audience surround me
Hiding as I screamed "give o'er the play"

And now even in this thunder, there's a silence,
A shroud of comfort standing at my door.
And at least I've got the sense to reconstruct you
And leave me twice as lucid as before.

Because everything I've ever done, I've done because I
love you
Silly you should ask
I'm afraid that I'll spend the better part of next year
scared that I might need you
Bring me down and I'll feel again.
Everything I've ever done, I've done because I love you
sideways
Sideways

And you left your mark,

And you left your face in the corner of my mind three times.

You left your mark,
You left your self.

And at least I've got the sense to sense what's coming
And realize that good things never come to those who wait too long

Because everything I've ever done, I've done because I
love you

Silly you should ask

I'm afraid that I'll spend the better part of next year
scared that I might need you

You gotta bring me down, I'm gonna feel again

Everything I've ever done, I've done because I love you
sideways

Sideways

Visit Matt Caplan page on MotoLyrics.com, to get more lyrics and videos.