In the kitchen past midnight by the buzzing fridge in moonlight the Holy Father told the world to hush there's just the soft hiss from a toilet flush I saw her for the first time, she made me crazy while the band played something hazy I think now I wait until tomorrow yes she is my brand new sorrow

In the car with a short wave radio the sky is clearing up for about a minute or so she plucks her sleeve I can't believe we met her look is friendly, mine's of a man in sweat 'you want my love for you to be stronger but don't forget the heart is a muscle not easy to work out' she suddenly said I do a little dance drenched in alcohol that's head down and one arm stretched against the wall

Across the sparkling waters I sail my boat back to that april morning on a spot not too remote where once my hands were much too shaky to use my mobile phone when by the throat I put her to bed now with weeds overgrown 'you want my love for you to be stronger but don't forget the heart is a muscle not easy to work out' I know
by the buzzing fridge in moonlight
I know
