Your clothes spread out on the floor just like it was Before
A homerun is a hit I'll never score
The hours before the break of dawn are as fragile as a
Song
And can go on and on and on and on and on

We wait for the light to break through the summer night
I hope I run into you tomorrow
And I hope you will talk to me until
The morning comes, until the morning comes

Looking for my clothes on the floor, I gently close the Door
In times like these, you're all I'm looking for
I swear to God I know that I want to struggle to get by
The fact that all the good things someday die

Because all the good things someday die

We wait for the light to break through the summer night
I hope I run into you tomorrow
And I hope you will talk to me until
The morning comes, until the morning comes
The morning comes, until the morning comes
Til the morning comes
Til the morning comes

We wait for the light to break through the summer night
I hope I run into you tomorrow
And I hope you will talk to me until
The morning comes, until the morning comes
The morning comes, until the morning comes
Until the morning comes
