You were wrong, weren't you.
About everything, including us.
Your dad still loves you and your sister, she's still allergic to happiness.
And I know you hate to see her sad.
You say there's so many demons on this earth it looks like hell.
But it could be worse.
She said she was leaving and she kept her word.

Quiet, your aunt tells her daughter, who's dancing round the table where you battled your sister over jellies back when she was able to care about little things like her viewmaster and that ladle with the care bear handle.
And I couldn't handle your call, Please help us find her

And on the grave chance darling, there's a funeral you know I'll be there with that scarf on, that you gave me on the nite we said goodbye.
But don't expect to hold my arm or me to linger long enough to do harm, I'll hug your mom, avoid your dad and be gone.

There was a time when I said I won't love, anyone other than you, I was wrong.
you know how much I care about her to come along But where's your alcoholic brother, your asshole lover, they know she's gone

And I know you're scared they'll blame you, worse yet, forget your name and you'll become sad sister of the missing girl

I'm sure she's fine, dancing through woods of neon light
The biggest smile of heaven white
The bluest eyes, no longer red, or wet, or wide They'll never fear, they'll never die

And I know you're scared they'll blame you, worse yet,

forget your name and you'll become sad sister of the dancing girl
