On a lonesome evening, when rain turns pavement black
I put you on a train, I'd never see you back again....
'cause you were leaving, I couldn't fathom why and the moon was a slice of lemon in a gin and tonic
sky
gin and tonic sky well I put you on a train, you should have heard the engine's laughter sayin', "I'm takin' hey away and don't come running after."
you gave me one last cold kiss, colder than steel this would be the last time and my tears were like vinegar burning in my eyes burning in my eyes
and the moon was a slice of lemon in a gin and tonic
sky
gin and tonic sky
Please swear you won't take her from me now And I always said train stations gave me a lonesome feeling
'cause from someone somewhere they were stealing, stealing na na na na na, na na and to hear the train's arms a violently pumping and a little ruby heart inside me a thumping, I was my own man now, a soldier on a battlefield, A grains of sand on a gold dust beach
A one man band with an empty open hand,
A one man band with an empty open hand
and the moon was a slice of lemon in a gin and tonic
sky
gin and tonic sky
and the moon was a slice of lemon in a gin and tonic
sky
gin and tonic sky
Gin and tonic sky, gin and tonic sky,
Gin and tonic sky, gin and tonic sky
Sky oh! gin and tonic sky
