four years and twenty two shades of blonde is all that seperated us, why couldn't we have carried on?
we could have got married, you could have carried some of my sons.

you let me change the radio station in your car, do you remember that time i raised my voice because you said you'd never ever heard of the La's?

you continued to get intimidated, but then your finger tips wrapped round those knuckles of mine,
the fear walked home and your smile returned,
and all of a sudden everything was fine.

but those days have passed and these types of relationship never last.

so please don't pretend that we'll stay friends, because you know as well as i do that that,
well that just, it never happens, well no that just never happens.

how come i always see you out with those boys that we used to argue about? you walk over all flustered and stuff telling everyone inside that you've had enough.

you spend eighty five per cent of your night trying to make me understand why you were standing so close while you're kissing him.
and why you left that place holding his hand, oh darling can't you see that it's got fuck all to do with me?

please don't pretend that we'll stay friends, cos you know as well as i do that that,
well that just, it never happens
