Door slams, car starts, he's on the road
She's left there sitting, angry and alone
Thinking what she should have said
Well, maybe she should have gone to bed
Now his words are swirling around in her head

He said and she said
And they both yelled together
Neither one hearing or listening to the other Words like 'you never..' and 'you don't understand'
One word, then another
And then the whole thing's out of hand

But love's still there
It's just hiding in the dark 'cause it's scared
Hang on to those feelings that you know are true
And remember that this person means everything to you

Siren screams, breaks through her dreams
She rolls to the right
She realizes that he's still lost to the night
She gets out of bed both worried and mad
She prays that he's safe, her hanger holds back the drape

But love's still there
It's just hiding in the dark 'cause it's scared
Hang on to those feelings that you know are true
And remember that this person means everything to
you

Door opens and in walks her baby
With a look on her face, says 'i'm sorry'
Now's not the time or the place to play games
So you hold out your hand and he does the same

And love's still there
It's just hiding in the dark 'cause it's scared
Hang on to those feelings that you know are true
And remember that this person means everything to

you

Love's still there

It's just hiding in the dark 'cause it's scared

Hang on to those feelings that you know are true

And remember that this person means everything to

you
