And when the morning sunlight drives out the darkness of the night

I see you then at the corner of my eye
The shadows on the mountain forming the letters of your name

I hear you then as you face the morning sky

And as you come alive, I feel the sun so warm You run to greet me, the river runs so long

As all pride amongst the masses disappears and drifts away

I just sit and watch the level of confusion in the day In the anger of the morning, screaming o'er the Southern hills

Come the enterers of hope to seek my guidance and they wail

Pinny come the clouds upon us closing up the Earth
Silently the rain commands us, "run before you drown"

As the moonless night approaches, I reflect upon my thoughts

When the moment of refusal seems to partiss So while the truth is all rejected, this you cannot understand

Better stop to fall, condemning those who waited in the land

Pinny come the clouds upon us closing up the Earth
Silently the rain commands us, "run before you drown"
