They pull up the chairs to the table. She stares at the food on her plate, at the toast and the butter. Her father and mother... she pushes away. And they rise in the morning and they sleep in the dark and even though nobody's looking she's falling apart. She gets home from school too early and closes the door to her room there's nothing inside her. She's weak and she's tired of feeling like this. And they rise in the morning and they sleep in the dark and even though nobody's looking she's falling apart. They call her for dinner she makes up a reason she looks at her arms and she rolls down her sleeves and her mother started to see through her lies and last night her father has tears in his eyes. And they rise in the morning and they sleep in the dark and even though nobody's looking she's falling apart. (instrumental) And they rise in the morning and they sleep in the dark and even though nobody's looking but she's falling apart. She's falling apart.
