(R.J. Johnson/Johnston)

yesterday I felt my earth shaking I caught a glimpse of all my heroes falling down yesterday I felt my will breaking crashed through the clouds at my feet down on the ground
help me find a place to stand but still you call me an eyesore and that's a sure nice way to look at my pain but I can't turn my head on all that we became all the lies and shame have fell take my hand I feel my hold is slipping and the rocks that fall speak their distance to the
help lay me down with grace and still you call me an eyesore
and that's a sure nice way to look at my pain
but I can't turn my head

and left me with a hurting
look at my pain, look at my pain look at my pain I can call my name out to the wind and try to push my plea on through but how long can you call into the wind when the wind is calling you still you call me an eyesore
and that's a sure nice way to look at my pain
but I can't turn my head
all the lies and all of the shame have fell
sure nice way to look at my pain, sure nice way to look at my pain sure nice way to look at my pain
