"Home In A Lighthouse"

Deny the way things changed call it growing up but that's a front you forget just how real life can feel finding it pointless to even say a word if it's all in fear of what someone else might hear don't confuse the kindness in my eyes for a weakness telling me to compromise there's no bottle filled with answers no universal standard written down to save your life

But I bet this sounded better in your head I'm losing interest in all your promises it's a matter of fact I was all alone you were only looking out for yourself

I'll make my home inside this lighthouse it's where I'll find my own answers to it all

I just can't pretend to be comfortable with seeing the world through someone else's eyes
