When you were younger, blue-eyed boy wonder
Never used to ponder on what life may hide
And now you're older, the nights are so much colder
Never even told her, how you feel inside

And you were so proud
With your head up in the white clouds
She'd call you so loud, but you'd never know
Now that you're wiser, you'd never compromise her Everyday you'd realize that this bird has flown

And you blown out all your candles, one by one
And you curse yourself for things you've never done

She will wait for you, idolize, adore you Love and reassure you
You couldn't let it be
You let it linger, slip on through your fingers
So that September, she moved across the sea

How your face dropped and how your heart stopped Sitting at the bus-stop when they told you that she'd gone
So you, run to the harbor
Need to tell her that you love her
As the boat disappears you never felt so alone

'Cause you blown out all your candles, one by one
And you curse yourself for things you've never done

And where were you when her hour of need had come
And now you curse yourself for things you've never done

And now your grandson, blond haired blue-eyed handsome
Calls you up from London and sits and asks you why
So you answer, don't be scared of failure
The only failure, is never to try
Never to try, never to try, never to try

And where were you when her hour of need had come
And now you curse yourself for things you've never
done
