He's working hard from day to day he's happy when he's there At home he switches the TV on and dives into its world

But something's breaking into his peace he hears the children play They're making too much noise he thinks they're threatening his existence

He's beating his children
He's beating his children
He's beating his children
He's beating his children

Once he starts he cannot stop he's overwhelmed by rage It's so easy to regress with feelings he can't express

By torturing the weak and the small the king itself can hide By tackling kicking tearing he will get his peace of mind

He's beating his children
He's beating his children
He's beating his children
He's beating his children

He's beating his children
He's beating his children
He's beating his children
He's beating his children

Beating his children
Beating his children
