Don't tell me they all hate me now too don't tell me it all comes back to you the only thing I can think to do is to sap some strength from somebody new

I miss not knowing you so well you make yourself useful to each one who cries and then left without you they'll be paralyzed my self-respect means more to me than you do or at least it used to

I wonder what it was I thought that I knew did I realize I would never be enough for you?

you ask again what is it that I'm waiting for that is a stupid question that is to be sure you sit there calmly with your eloquence and I thought the best offence was a good defence but I keep losing every round I remember when it all started going down

I remember the beer caught in my throat and the lonely comfort of my only winter coat I could tell you exactly when I fell it was back when I did not know you so well
