"Hey Princess"

I hear the summer's almost gone and maybe aeverything is done and anyway it's so confusing now I can't remember how we got to where we are

I see you everywhere around I hear your voice in every sound and though I know that it just couldn't be something responds in me and I am hopelessly beyond myself

So I shout: "Hey Princess, won't you come back home?"
and I cry, I'm shaking and I'm on my own and I wisper your name until the morning comes
"Hey Princess, you're the only one"

Everyday is running grey Doesn't matter how I try Don't know how I used to spend my time I can't remeber now, it seems so long ago

So I keep wondering what to say if you should ever cross my way I write it down and tear it up again it seems so stupid when it leaves my mind out there, there's nothing left

So I shout: "Hey Princess, won't you come back home?"
and I cry, I'm shaking and I'm on my own
"Hey Princess, you're the only one"

And I really need to have you here beside me now
And I'm so overbooked, so sensitive I'm sliding now Through lousy weather, radio and magazines And pictures of some happy end that could have been
That could have been
That could have been

and I cry, I'm shaking and I'm on my own

and I shout: "Hey Princess, won't you come back home?"

and I cry, I'm shaking and I'm on my own
"Hey Princess, you're the only one"
