Lights in the sky
Colorless bulbs burning bright
I'll try to find
The best star that heavens provide

Oh what a sight it would be
If the skies were replaced with, flying machines
We'd breathe gasoline
And speak from our tongues, not our hearts

Don't close your eyes
You might miss a shooting star
Oh don't you know, if you fall asleep
You'll lose everything that means anything, to you
So don't you dare forget

We gave our lives to learn how to fly on our own
But wings only work when we are completely alone

Don't close your eyes
You might miss a shooting star
Oh don't you know, if you fall asleep
You'll lose everything that means anything, to you
So don't you dare forget

I spread my wings and flew over a blurring sea
The sun kissed the moon and the sky fell into the deep
I fell asleep, I've felt myself sink and crash into the sea
All I could do was sleep, for now
Sleep for now
