When the sun goes down behind the cold dark mountain
When the moon starts lounging in that big, black sky We'll take the car downtown where the streets are always crowded Wave our hands to all the people as we pass them by

When the wind picks up between the empty buildings
When the water starts rising in that alleyway We'll walk outside and close our eyes and toss a coin into the river
And if you look then we'll be standing in the downtown rain

We're going stargazing
And shadow chasing
Until the moon erases our saddest songs
And we'll take our places
In the midnight races
Until the night goes wasting in to the early morn

When the lights shine bright upon the crowds of lonely people
When the city writes our names upon their marquis signs
We'll walk on past and top our hats while all the gold turns to glitter
And we'll be staring at the headlines with their jealous eyes

We're going stargazing
And shadow chasing
Until the moon erases our saddest songs
And we'll take our places
In the midnight races
Until the night goes wasting in to the early morn
