

Dave Alvin

"Love In The Remains"

Visit "Love In The Remains" on MotoLyrics.com

It must hurt your mouth to lie like that,
Knowing deep down you disagree.
We both tell ourselves that the love is gone,
Truth is it will never leave.

I wish I had the words to make things right,
But they all get caught; my throat get tight.
Everything I do, it all seems to go so wrong.

This house of love has come tumbling down,
It could not withstand the strain.
But somewhere deep down between the rubble and
ground,
There's love in the remains.

See, without you I'm half of me.
So with the same mouth I've used to beat you down,
I offer up my apology.

I wish I had the words to make things right,
But they all get caught; my throat get tight.
Everything I do, it all seems to go so wrong.

This house of love has come tumbling down,
It could not withstand the strain.
But somewhere deep down beneath the rubble and
ground,
There's love in the remains.

I wish it came down to just desire,
I wish it came down to just my will.
It's true it takes one to tear down,
But it takes two to rebuild.

This house of love has come tumbling down,
It could not withstand the strain.
But somewhere deep down between the rubble and
ground,
There's love in the remains.

