"The Double"

He's got a double for his stunts
He's got a way of pushing men out the door You'll think he's brave until he's touched Nothing like constancy to show us what we're made of Here's a man with a time when he thought he'd liked you too much Now he's changing his mind he's all right alone

He likes the colors on the couch
And the way he hang his things on the wall He'll break a sweat to stop the rust Something like frailty is always underneath us
Here's a man with a time when he thought he'd liked
you too much Now he's changing his mind because it's never enough

And he'll tell you he's grown to know better than to commit to subtlety To subtlety I know you'd like to rip it up and take a swing at the sky But broken it won't fill you up Though you're taking it in and you're breaking a sweat Watch it spilling out watch it spilling out
