Left one to one
We felt we'd come along.
Together we did it all.
And I never felt so strong.

To mean what I say is a hard line to walk.
From here on, today, not to just talk.
Because my actions make up myself and the group.
On a crash-course to hell.
And you're in it too.

Does killing today, bring peace for tomorrow?

Not to look back at the life that we lived.
Friends that we made, and the dumb things we did.
And if you think you can be unconditionally free,
From dogma that bites.
You're welcome to try.

So much work is undone.
Differences aside, we've begun.
So much to change, so much to forgive.
So much in this life with the chance that we give.

Lastnight I was thinking why,
I'd stand in harm's way to see you through.
I'm not the least bit worried I might die.
Because I know you'd do the same thing too.
