Staring at the sidewalk, there's a crack in which a flower grows reminded me of somebody not hangin' around here anymore and everything is so pretty/pretty fucked up, obviously when you call me from the other side to tell me everything is fine and I will always love even when your eyes are fading and if they catch you, I will save you, I will get you out

And this, what about this?
is it anything at all, is it a growing cancer in your heart and this life...I don't have a clue but when they told you not to worry, didn't it bother you?
well all that's very nice but this is still a song against life

Where do all these people come from, where do all these words belong? a never-ending bible, everything they say is our command and everybody wants the same, everybody here wants nothing, grow up to be a millionaire is all there is
and this, what about this?
is it anything at all is it a growing cancer in our hearts?
and this life...I don't have a clue but when they told me not to look back, sure it bothered me as hell all that's very nice, but this is a song against life

He goes out in the kitchen, he goes there every second and your plastic father said:
"it's just too boring standing here all day" and went out for a lover or a new world to discover and the watertower threw its shadow over your house and this, what about this? is it anything at all?
is it a growing cancer in your heart?
and this life...I don't have a clue

you?
well all that's very nice but this is a song against life
