There is a war after war and rumors of war exploding
from the east.
There is a rumbling in the desert and there is talk about
the beast.
Mothers cry because the rivers run high with the blood
of too many sons.
Some people say peace is on the way but the worst is
still to come.

And that thunder getting closer are the trumpets
getting ready to blow.
There is going to be a shout that will wake the dead
perhaps you had better be ready to go.
For this world that lies like a land of dreams has neither
hope, nor love, nor light.
And we are los on this pitch dark plain while ignorant
armies clash in the night.

There is a war after war and rumors of war exploding
from the east.
The devils in power pretty to gods of war and sacrifice
their beasts.
Mothers cry because the rivers run high with the blood
of too many sons.
Some people say peace is on the way but the worst is
still to come.

And that thunder getting closer are the trumpets
getting ready to blow.
There is going to be a shout that will wake the dead
and perhaps you will know
That there was a lesson never learned, a truth beyond
our scope...
That peace is more than the lack of war, but we have buried the corpse of hope.
