roses are not red
a still life never growing the sun is not a source of light and the wind will not be blowing birds will die
up in the sky
the sky that is not blue everything is as it was i never loved you

the rain is not been falling and telephones ring unaware of why we bother calling no one there would ever care to hear what we've been through everything is in its place

i never loved you

your face, so unremarkable could never light this lonely town your voice, all but forgotten does not echo every single sound your eyes without expression, there's nothing special in that case so why do i spend every night dreaming of the things i'll never miss? no joy as spring arrives there's nothing sad about you leaving and i will live my life the same maybe this time without breathing so look through these eyes that never cried and any fool could see what's true
roses are not red

and i never loved you
